We often think that if we are good then everything in our lives would be good. But we are mistaken. As I said in a previous blog, we learn most of the things from our surroundings. If in our societies or the people to whom we spend much time if they are good. Can help us much better than other resources. Someone told me at the beginning of my journey heading to my career. "If you are good then the entire world is good for you". Sometimes this sentence stimulates me but no longer. So I came up with some thoughts which refute this sentence & I was right. "If you are good with the people you stay around with is good". Then you have a Best of Both World. Barely we got such coincidences. Surroundings taught us attitude, behavior, and lots of things. First, find the Best, Then be Best. Maybe you've heard about a single person who can bring or make a massive change. But those single changes come from a team or societies and then after some time those changes get a shape of drastic change which we call intelligent or professional. Can you be a professional on your own without commuting to someone? We can be but not much better than those who learn from the outside world. I'm not talking about education or any skills. There is a lot of difference between self-study and study. You can defeat someone in any topic which you have studied on your own in a rival taught by someone. So you would have more information about the topic. It's just an analogy.

I hope you find it interesting.
